

FOR THE CHILDREN

The next
 Twelve too children to sleep
 If mother should do that wouldn't it be Too funny for anything?
 I'd sit up in bed by my little white gown
 And sing, like the brooks, the scales and down
 They say when the mother bird thinks to live for three or four years, these find a cozy corner and bury themselves in it for their winter sleep. The prongers build small close hives for themselves in the first cold days of November. Recall the loose bark of a tree, for example, they crawl down to wait for the warm spring sunbath.

The tiny test-makers gather a couple, where there are plenty of them, they can get into a whole neck of somebody's wardrobe or closet. The ground up bees dig down into in a middle-down to sleep. The spider takes the last trouble of the job and turns her foot up as close as she can to her body in the same house that she built for herself in summer and if discarded just as soon as she can. She is not strong enough to climb out of reach and off to sleep again, too heavy or drowsy to fear danger.

Early in the spring little spiders wake up again, cooled, refreshed, ready for work.—Chicago Tribune
